

iKBBBI Announces Debt Recovery Support for Members

The Institute of Kitchen, Bedroom & Bathroom Installers (or iKBBBI as they're better known) announced that they'll be offering their members additional support to recoup customer debt during this difficult economic climate.

In reaction to member feedback and the ever increasing media reporting of credit crunching and recession, The Institute have partnered with a leading law firm in the south to further support its members and their financial woes.

The new partnership and support from the Southampton based law firm Lawdit Solicitors will provide members with dedicated support in the recovery of financial debt owed by their respective customers.

iKBBBI Director Damian Walters said: "We expect our members to carry out a professional service, completed to the highest standard, with a pre-agreed fair price with their customers. If our member has fulfilled their obligations in full and their customers are withholding payment unjustly, then we will support both sides come to an amicable and fair resolution."

The iKBBBI will initially liaise with their member and communicate with the customer direct, offering advice to both parties completely free of charge. Should the issue not be resolved then iKBBBI members will receive an optional level of support from Lawdit at a preferred member discounted rate.

Lawdit Director and practicing Solicitor Michael Coyle commented: "We fully understand the needs of professional tradesman and their business and we have created, in partnership with the iKBBBI, a tailor made service that will support members and their financial disputes. Our immediate objective would be to resolve matters in an amicable manor before we even considered the route of legal action".

iKBBBI fellow Director Drew Carter added: "We hope this is seen as real demonstration of our commitment and support coupled with membership starting from just a few pounds per week we feel this benefit represents additional value for money to our members".
